

In the United States, democratic senators Chris Murphy and John Tester are not happy with the first amendment that gives freedom of speech to the people and the media. This is because most of these liberals want to suppress political speech that does not support their endeavors and discloses their corruption activities. They have proposed some amendments to the constitution seeking to revert the Supreme Court's decision that gives citizens and media freedom to express their views. If these amendments are effected, speech from American citizens, activists and reports from CNN, New York Times, the NLA, ACLU and the Catholic Church will have to undergo serious scrutiny before being released. These efforts are directed at serving selfish political and malicious interests from these politicians. Ultimately, this will assist them keep the truth under cover. To stop these selfish intentions from progressing, the American citizens should unite with other human rights bodies and activists and protest against these retrogressive objectives. If Americans object these ideas in unison, the censorship cannot stand.
